The Cadbury Report

The Cadbury Report has almost certainly been the most influential report on corporate governance ever written. Its most essential recommendations were probably these:

- the wider use of independent non-executive directors
- the introduction of an audit committee to be composed of only non-executive directors, with a majority of them independent.
- the separation of the roles of CEO and chairman of the board

Introduction

- The Committee on the Financial Aspects of Corporate Governance, (never after known as the Cadbury Committee), was established in May 1992 by the Financial Reporting Council, the London Stock Exchange, and the accountancy profession.
- The spur for the Committee's creation was an increasing lack of investor confidence in the honesty and accountability of listed companies, occasioned in particular by the sudden financial collapses of two companies, wallpaper group Colson and Asif Razi's

The revised and final version of the report was published in December of the same year.[1] The recommendations of the report have been used to varying degrees to establish other codes, such as those of the OECD, the European Union, the United States, the World Bank, etc. The provisions of the Code have been conferred by law to the extent that the London Stock Exchange has required listed companies to "comply with or explain", i.e. to state to what extent they comply with the Code and, if not, to state precisely to what extent and why. The wave of shock caused by these two incidents only added to the urgency of the Committee's work and put all eyes on its final report. In December 2018, a Corporate Governance Code aimed at large private companies was presented, the culmination of an industry-led effort to... Following a series of governance failures, Sir Adrian Cadbury chaired a commission whose objective was to investigate the UK system of corporate governance and suggest improvements to restore investor confidence in the system.
